Mother and child hit by truck in Surrey while trick-or-treating

A three-year-old child has a broken leg after being hit by a truck while trick-or-treating in Surrey on Saturday night, according to Surrey RCMP.

A mother and child were crossing the street in the 13200 block of 62 Avenue around 7 p.m. when a male driver struck them while making a turn, according to a statement from police.

The mother sustained non-life-threatening injuries and the pair was taken to hospital for treatment.

Mounties say the driver tried to stop mid-turn after he spotted the pair, but was not able to do so in time.

The driver remained at the scene and spoke to police, who say alcohol is not a factor in the collision.

It is not yet clear whether the mother and child were in a crosswalk, according to police. No charges have been laid at this time but police continue to investigate.

It was a bad night for pedestrians in Surrey.

A 57-year-old man was taken to hospital in critical condition after being struck by a blue Toyota Yaris in the 8300 block of 144 Street shortly after 9 p.m., according to Surrey RCMP.

The driver remained at the scene and the investigation continues.

Busy Halloween for fire, rescue services

STATISTICS

Holiday sees uptick in calls over previous two years

Emily Jackson
Metro | Vancouver

Halloween was busier than usual for Vancouver firefighters who fielded more calls on the holiday than previous years despite the late-night downpour.

Fire services received 188 calls between 4 p.m. and 4 a.m. on the night known for fireworks, raucous parties and a downtown packed with costumed revelers, Vancouver fire department spokesman Cpt. Jonathan Gormick said Sunday.

That's up from the calls reported in the same 12-hour period in 2014 when there were 134 calls and 2013 with 116 calls, Gormick said.

He attributes the increase to Halloween falling on a Saturday night, although he said some of the change is likely statistical drift unrelated to the holiday.

Despite the jump in calls, the only two notable events were a structure fire in the early evening (crews do not believe it was fireworks related) and a motor vehicle incident between a limousine and an ambulance that resulted in a smashed storefront on Granville Street, Gormick said.

Fire services received 188 calls on Halloween night, up from 134 calls over the same period in 2014.

Vancouver police spokesman Sgt. Randy Fincham said in an email that he was not advised of any significant incidents.

NEW WESTMINSTER

Officers destroy cougar

Authorities killed a cougar that was spotted prowling the streets of New Westminster as children trick-or-treated on Halloween night, according to New Westminster police.

Police received reports of a cougar sighting in the 400 block of Glenbrook Drive around 7 p.m., prompting the department to send a social-media warning.

Conservation officers were called to help find and deal with the cougar, @NewWestPD posted on Twitter. The animal was located around 10:30 p.m. a few blocks from where it was spotted.

"Unfortunately due to public risk it had to be destroyed," @NewWestPD wrote. "Thanks to all who called in to assist... A sad ending but the risk to the public was just too significant."

A follow-up tweet indicated officers were not able to tranquilize the animal. Response was mixed, with some questioning why the cougar couldn't have been captured and relocated.

"I am so tired of animals being 'destroyed' because they wandered where ppl happen to be," Twitter user Esther Peverley wrote. EMILY JACKSON/METRO

City councillors refuse to expand taxi service

TRANSPORTATION

Reject service expansion, avoid Uber decision

Emily Jackson
Metro | Vancouver

Don't expect to see more taxis, let alone Uber, on Vancouver's streets any time soon.

After hearing passionate pleas from the local taxi industry on Thursday night, Vancouver councillors rejected a staff report that recommended expanding taxi service in the downtown entertainment district during peak hours — even though they agreed there aren't enough cabs to meet the existing demand at certain times.

Councillors dismissed the recommendation to grant 38 permanent licences to suburban taxi companies to pick up people that pour out of the bars and nightclubs along Granville Street on the weekends. They also refused to grant 99 permanent, part-time licences for local cabs during peak periods.

Instead, they voted to extend a temporary moratorium on new taxi licences by 12 months. They also pushed for more enforcement for suburban cabs that illegally pick up passengers in the city, arguing these cabs don't meet the same green or accessibility standards.

The decision to maintain the status quo comes as ride sharing companies such as Uber, which connects drivers and passengers with a smartphone app, shake up the traditional taxi industry. City staff reported that ride sharing is a "leap forward" when it comes to shorter wait times and consumer satisfaction, but warned of passenger safety issues, impacts on local taxis and accessibility concerns.

Coun. Geoff Meggs argued that the city shouldn't make it harder for the local taxi industry by introducing more competition from suburban cabs during this time of "dramatic change."

Council pushed for a regional solution to ride sharing and urged the province to take the lead on the Uber file. Meggs called on B.C. Transportation Minister Todd Stone to bring in key stakeholders to develop province-wide policy.

The only service expansion council wasn't opposed to was an expansion of the city's accessible taxi fleet.

It urged the provincial Passenger Transportation Branch to reconsider the Vancouver Taxi Association's application for 58 accessible taxi licences to better serve people with disabilities.

Mayor Gregor Robertson said getting more accessible taxis on the road is the city's top priority, as only 17 per cent of the city's taxi fleet is accessible.

Montreal, Halifax, Toronto, Edmonton and Calgary all have more cabs per capita than Vancouver, according to the staff report.

EAST VANCOUVER

Brewery location falls flat

The proposal for a new craft brewery and tasting room in East Vancouver is coming up against some resistance from a few neighbours.

Strathcona Brewing plans to open up a new place to make and sip suds at the corner of Campbell and East Hastings. But the location is too close to the Ray-Cam Community Centre and Stamps Place social housing complex, said Guy Wakeman, resident and president of the Stamps Place tenants council.

Wakeman wants the city to consider requiring breweries to locate at least 300 metres from community centres — the same rules that now apply to marijuana dispensaries. He said there is already enough alcohol available in the neighbourhood and his two children don't need to see another bar.

Judy McGuire of the Inner City Safety Society reiterated his concerns and sent a news release urging the city to direct the brewery to choose another location.

But brewery operator Tim Knight said he's received "overwhelming positive feedback" for the proposal to bring life to a shuttered building in what's already a manufacturing zone.

He hopes the tasting room draws people from the neighbourhood while improving walkability and the sense of community. He is happy to meet with the Stamps Place residents to address their concerns.

"I want to be a good neighbour. Let's work on it together," he said.

Canucks pay tribute to Grizzlies' 20th anniversary

Cam Tucker
Metro | Vancouver

As part of recognizing the 20-year anniversary of Rogers Arena, the Vancouver Canucks are paying homage to the long-departed Vancouver Grizzlies with a visit from Shareef Abdur-Rahim on Monday.

"Grizzlies" night — the Canucks host the Philadelphia Flyers as the main attraction — is supposed to be a celebration of the NBA team that eventually left Vancouver under incredibly acrimonious circumstances following six seasons, one disaster after another, beginning in 1995.

But let's just remember all the good things the Grizzlies did in Vancouver. Let's forget all the bad.

Let's forget their cumulative record in Vancouver was 101 wins and 359 losses, becoming the quickest team in NBA history to reach 300 franchise losses.

Let's forget management became synonymous with incompetence (cough Stu Jackson cough) and poor draft history. In the 1996 NBA draft, Grizzlies brass — led by general manager Jackson — opted to select Abdur-Rahim at No. 3 overall, leaving Kobe Bryant and Victoria's own Steve Nash on the board. But really, what did Bryant and Nash, the local talent, ever do in their respective NBA careers?

Let's forget Steve Francis, the No. 2 overall pick in the 1999 draft who couldn't even fake the slightest hint of a smile at the idea of starting his career in a world-class city when the Grizzlies selected him.

Let's forget how billionaire owner Michael Heisley drove the final stake into the hearts of local basketball fans by swiftly moving the team to Memphis for the 2001-2002 season.

Let's forget how, that first season, Michael Jordan awoke in the fourth quarter — reportedly after some trash talking from Vancouver guard Darrick Martin — to destroy the Grizzlies and give the powerhouse Chicago Bulls a come-from-behind win. No, wait. Let's remember that one. Come on, it's Michael.

See, we should remember the good things.

Let's remember that incredible start to their expansion season, when the Grizzlies won their first two games in franchise history. OK, so they went on to endure losing streaks of 19 and 23 games that season, and won only 99 times combined over six seasons after that.

Let's remember those mini basketball hoops with the cool Grizzlies logo. Did anyone else's hoop break after too much use or vicious slam-dunks with the accompanying orange-sized toy basketball?

See, so many good things to remember.

Pet lover tries to save more than 100 dogs from death row

ANIMAL WELFARE

Rescue group has found new homes for 400 pooches so far

Thandi Fletcher
Metro | Vancouver

When Susan Patterson flew to California last week, she wasn't expecting to return home with a furry passenger tucked under her airplane seat.

Chalk it up to an occupational hazard for Patterson, founder of Thank Dog I Am Out, a not-for-profit dog rescue society in Vancouver that aims to rescue mostly small dogs on death row in the United States and bring them to Canada.

"He's the cutest, most amazing thing on the face of the earth," she told Metro. "I named him Canuck, stuck him under my seat on the airplane and brought him home last night."

Canuck is just one of more than 400 dogs that Patterson has helped rescue from high-kill shelters in the U.S. since 2009.

On Nov. 7, her group is flying 120 lucky pooches to Vancouver where they will be unleashed into a 10,000-square-foot hangar turned "dog utopia" at YVR's south terminal for a mass adoption event called #Save100Dogs.

After being flooded with hundreds of requests for the pups, Patterson said she has been forced to start turning away adoption applications for the event.

Seeing the high demand for small dogs in Vancouver doesn't surprise Patterson.

Six years ago, she said she faced the same struggle when a search for small or medium-sized dogs at local B.C. shelters turned up no leads.

Susan Patterson, founder of Thank Dog I Am Out, holds Homer, a disabled Chihuahua-mix she adopted after he was rescued from a high-kill shelter in Washington State in 2009. CONTRIBUTED

> I invite everyone of my critics to come and see what we do. If you can show me 120 dogs that are going to die on Friday, I'm going to show you 120 dogs that are sleeping by the fire this Christmas.
> Susan Patterson

Patterson said she felt she had no choice but to look beyond the border. That's when she found Homer— an abused, disabled, Chihuahua-mix that she said was pulled off death row in Washington State.

The experience prompted her to look into the issue of high-kill shelters in the U.S. After learning more, she knew she needed to find a way to help.

Not long after, Patterson said she rescued her first dog from a "horrible" high-kill shelter in San Bernardino, Calif. She said that dog is "now living big time here in Vancouver."

Helping her get the word out, Patterson has partnered with outspoken animal advocate Alison Eastwood, daughter of actor Clint Eastwood. Last week, the pair spent a day at a high-kill animal shelter near L.A., where a CNN news crew documenting the city's small-dog overpopulation crisis trailed them.

That's where Patterson met her newest puppy addition, Canuck.

"I was holding the dog and talking to the reporter and then at the end of the interview, I'm supposed to hand this dog back to the shelter, and I said 'Nope,'" she recalled the scene. "It was just like, there's no way I'm handing you this dog back."

Canuck is a three-month-old puppy rescued by Susan Patterson from a high-kill shelter in California. CONTRIBUTED

Most of the canines Patterson rescues come from California, where she said an overpopulation crisis has resulted in about 6,000 dogs being euthanized every week.

She said Canuck would have likely faced the same fate. Small dogs are often put down first due to fears they may be infected with canine parvovirus, a highly contagious virus.

"In one shelter, in one county, they can kill 600 in one day," she said. "These are beautiful, adoptable dogs."

Patterson acknowledged she has faced some criticism for importing dogs into B.C. when there are many dogs already available for adoption locally. But she said her mandate is to rescue dogs from being unnecessarily euthanized, no matter where they live.

"I invite everyone of my critics to come and see what we do," she said. "If you can show me 120 dogs that are going to die on Friday, I'm going to show you 120 dogs that are sleeping by the fire this Christmas."

She said the dogs she imports all receive veterinary check-ups before they board the airplane. Two veterinarians in California spay and neuter the pets, as well as de-worm them and provide medication to prevent heartworm.

At next Saturday's adoption event, pet lovers will be able to see the pups arrive in Vancouver when the Wings of Rescue charity touches down on the tarmac.

Dog behaviourists will then meet with each of the pre-approved adopters to find a pet that best fits their needs before the animals go home.

120 dogs are flying to Vancouver on Nov. 7 for a mass adoption event called #Save100Dogs.

Captain hails courage of those aboard sinking ship

DISASTER

Five died when whale-watcher vessel capsized

The captain of a whale-watching vessel that capsized near Tofino says passengers and crew were heroic as the vessel went under, killing five people.

Wayne Dolby said he's praying for the families and friends of the Britons who died and an Australian man who remains missing in the waters off the west coast of Vancouver Island.

"Over the past week we have rightly heard of the courage and heroism of the people of Tofino, Ahousaht, the coast guard and others who assisted in the search and rescue," Dolby said Friday.

"What we have not heard as much about is the courage and heroism of my passengers and crew who were involved in this terrible ordeal," he said in a statement released by Jamie's Whaling Station, where he's worked for 18 years.

"(To) most of all the families, friends and loved ones of those who did not come home, I want to express my heartfelt sympathies and I pray your grief for their loss will not stay with you as long as it will stay with me."

Jamie's has said the vessel went under so quickly on Sunday that there was no time to issue a distress call.

The Transportation Safety Board said that many of the passengers aboard the Leviathan II were sightseeing on one side of the upper deck when a wave hit from the opposite side, flipping the boat and sending the 27 passengers and crew overboard.

The Leviathan II sits at a dock after it was raised and towed from the Tofino area on Friday.
THE CANADIAN PRESS

Jamie's said in a statement issued Friday that the ship was fully tested and certified by Transport Canada for stability and other safety aspects after its initial modification into a whale-watching vessel almost 20 years ago, adding it was inspected by officials every year since then.

"Jamie's would never have allowed a single passenger or anyone else to be on the water in a vessel that we were not absolutely confident was safe."

Jamie's director of operations Corene Inouye said last Sunday's incident will be remembered as a "very dark day" in the company's history.

"Our company, our crews and our staff remain heartbroken by this tragic accident, and the road to healing will be a long one."

> I pray your grief for their loss will not stay with you as long as it will stay with me.
> Wayne Dolby, to the loved ones of those who died

Inouye said Jamie's has been assisting authorities and will continue to find ways to help people who are dealing with what happened.

The 20-metre-long ship has been towed to a secure location, where it will be monitored by the RCMP, said Roxanne Daoust, a spokeswoman for the Transportation Safety Board (TSB).

Investigators have interviewed survivors, crew members and people who rescued passengers but will continue to speak with more people, Daoust said.

The original TSB team has left the tourist town, but investigators will return next week to examine damage to the vessel.

There is still a long way to go with the investigation, Daoust said.

A naval architect will assess the ship's stability, an engineer will examine the engine, and data from electronic equipment will be analyzed.

TIME

Put end to daylight savings: Petition

Clocks in most of Canada turned back an hour early Sunday morning, but not everyone was pleased with the extra time.

"People with sleep disorders don't get an extra hour of sleep. They get an extra hour of laying there thinking about not sleeping," says Tara Holmes.

Holmes is one of two Kamloops residents who have created an online petition urging the provincial government to do away with daylight time, in which clocks leap forward an hour in March and fall back in November.

Daylight time has been a pet peeve for Bob Dieno, the petition's co-founder, since university, when he slept in on the day the clocks switched and missed the final exam in his class.

The time change is archaic and disruptive, Holmes argues, especially for people who have sensitive internal clocks, such as seniors and children.

There are also studies, Holmes says, that have found an increase in workplace and road accidents in the weeks following time changes.

"It's crazy when you look at the impact this has," she says.

The pair had hoped to get 10,000 people to sign the petition within four months. However, more than 13,000 added their names in a matter of weeks.

Now they are aiming to get more than 15,000 signatures before presenting the petition to the government.

Blaze blamed on fireworks

INVESTIGATION

Two occupants rescued; police search for three suspects

Thandi Fletcher
Metro | Vancouver

Police believe a blaze that engulfed an East Vancouver home late Thursday, resulting in about $500,000 worth of damage, was caused by the "careless use of fireworks" by three individuals.

Const. Brian Montague said police and firefighters responded to a report of a fire at a home on Woodland Drive near East 10th Avenue around 10:30 p.m.

He said two occupants were inside the home at the time, and one had to be rescued from the rear balcony by next-door neighbours using a ladder, he said.

"We're very fortunate that no one was killed," Montague told reporters Friday. "I believe there are some pets that are still outstanding, unfortunately, but extremely lucky that no one was killed in this fire."

He said the fire is believed to have been caused by the "careless use of fireworks by three individuals," who were seen running from the area and getting into a vehicle after flames broke out.

Montague said the homeowners were not involved.

While damage to the exterior of the home is "severe," Montague said the fire gutted the interior.

"When you see inside the house, that's when you see the real devastation," he said. "If this house can be repaired, we're estimating somewhere around half a million dollars to repair it."

"We do feel that this was just a group of individuals who were not thinking very well."
Const. Brian Montague

The damage caused to a home on Woodland Drive near East 10th Avenue on Thursday night is estimated at $500,000. Police allege three individuals carelessly setting off fireworks are responsible for the blaze. COURTESY VPD

Although the investigation is in its early stages, police say a Roman candle-type firework appears to have sparked the blaze.

Montague said police have spoken with witnesses, and are canvassing the neighbourhood Friday in search of more witnesses and video evidence.

He said police don't believe the fire was intentionally set or that the house was targeted.

"We do feel that this was just a group of people who were not thinking very well, were not realizing the dangers that can happen when you don't use fireworks properly," he said.

"We'd really like for them to give us a phone call."

Anyone with information about the identities of the three individuals is asked to call Vancouver police.

Memorial to be held for hiker

A University of Victoria student who died hiking near Campbell River, B.C., is being remembered for his love of the outdoors.

Anders Newman, 18, was camping with six friends in Strathcona Provincial Park last weekend, said the BC Coroners Service.

The group went for a morning hike Saturday near Big Interior Mountain. Newman lost his footing coming down a trail and fell off a steep cliff.

He was pronounced dead at the scene.

An obituary said Newman died doing what he loved, "hiking in the beautiful mountains of British Columbia."

"He was the most kind-hearted, fun-loving, caring, compassionate and adventurous young man with an infectious smile and the cutest dimples.

"And we will never forget his amazing hugs that made you feel so loved."

A flag will be lowered at the university on Saturday to mark the first-year student's death.

Joel Lynn, executive director of student services, said Newman was an extremely well-liked young man who had a promising future.

"He was the most kind-hearted, fun-loving, caring, compassionate and adventurous young man."
Obituary

"He will be sorely missed," Lynn said in a news release.

A memorial will be held Saturday in Newman's hometown of Cochrane, Alta.

Two men are facing charges after Vancouver police say a Good Samaritan was robbed in the city's east side.

It happened Friday evening. Police say the man was robbed at knife point after pulling over to help the two occupants of a vehicle that appeared to be broken-down on the side of the road.

The suspects fled without injuring their helpful victim.

Liberals make for diverse caucus

POLITICS

Social workers, lawyers, mayors and more on Parliament Hill

When Catherine McKenna looks at a roomful of her 127 fellow rookie Liberal MPs, she sees police chiefs, soldiers, aboriginal leaders, mayors, doctors, refugees, athletes, social workers, tradespeople, academics and several lawyers like herself.

"A lot of people really believed we were off-track with the last government and it was really important to contribute by stepping up to run," said McKenna, who defeated New Democrat incumbent Paul Dewar in the riding of Ottawa Centre.

McKenna is part of what may be the most diverse governing caucus of MPs that voters have ever sent to Parliament Hill.

She herself has a broad background beyond practising law, which enabled her to be a legal adviser to the United Nations peacekeeping mission in East Timor. She helped create her own non-government agency that works on governance and human rights issues abroad, and she's lectured on foreign affairs at the University of Toronto. She's also a competitive swimmer.

McKenna is typical, in some ways, of her broader caucus.

She's a rookie, like more than two-thirds of her fellow Liberal MPs — 184 Liberals in all.

At 44, McKenna is also part of the biggest demographic group in the Liberal caucus, with 82 of those elected falling in the 30-49 age range. The second largest is the 50-64 group, with 68 MPs, according to a Maclean's magazine analysis.

McKenna is also one of 50 women to be elected to the Liberal caucus.

The Liberals also have 38 of the 46 visible minorities elected to the House of Commons.

The Liberals painted the map red in and around most major cities, including the greater Vancouver and Montreal areas, Ottawa and its surrounding areas and the greater Toronto area, including Mississauga and Brampton, as well as most of Winnipeg.

The world is talking about Trudeau

POLITICAL STRATEGY

From Paris to Washington, analysts study Liberal victory

A rare phenomenon is transpiring in a foreign capital: people are curious about Canadian politics.

It's evident on multiple fronts in Washington — from conversations in cabs and coffee shops, in government offices and think-tanks, in media stories and from foreign politicians looking to learn about prime minister-designate Justin Trudeau.

During a U.S. visit, the leader of a centre-left European political party revealed he was reading a book about the recent history of Canada's Liberals and expressed hope of eventually meeting Trudeau.

"Fascinated" is how Diederik Samsom described his reaction to the Canadian election.

So it's no coincidence that he's asking questions about the campaign that pulled Canada's centre-left party from third place to a surprising majority.

He's not alone.

Inside the unofficial think-tank of the U.S. Democratic party, the Liberals' winning election playbook is being analyzed and its lessons shared with left-leaning parties around the world.

Matt Browne has prepared a briefing paper on the Liberal win for allies in different countries where he's heard curiosity or seen applicable lessons — including the U.K., Denmark, the Netherlands, France, Italy and Germany.

"It's been a pretty amazing week or so," Browne said in an interview. "Amongst the progressive community in particular, people have been trying to figure out what the lessons of this are."

He works on international partnerships at the Center for American Progress, founded and run by high-ranking figures in Democratic politics. Some of its senior members had met Trudeau and his team in opposition and they offered congratulations on the Liberal election victory.

OPPOSITION

Tories prepare for Ottawa and winter

If there's one thing Dianne Watts knows she needs to do before travelling to Ottawa this week to take her place in the official Opposition caucus, it's buy warmer clothes.

As the former mayor of Surrey, Watts hasn't had much experience with the biting winters she'll be facing in the national capital as part of the 99-member Conservative team, set to meet for the first time Thursday since the party lost its majority government on Oct. 19.

She handily won her Vancouver suburban riding, but her party was routed by Justin Trudeau's resurgent Liberals.

"When I made the decision to run federally, it was a decision I felt strongly about," Watts said in an interview.

Both rookies and veterans will have a learning curve, said James Rajotte, who served in opposition for six years.

PARLIAMENT

NDP rebuilds with 16 rookies

The New Democrats enter the 42nd session of Parliament with fewer than half of the members they had going into the 2015 federal election campaign.

Despite being forced back to third-party status, however, the party is poised to start over with a lot of fresh, young blood — ready to rebuild and focused on holding the majority Trudeau Liberals to account.

Erin Weir, one of 16 rookies on the New Democrat bench, sees his role as an MP as much like his election campaign — honed in on building Canada's economy and protecting the environment.

> The Liberals were able to outmanoeuvre us.
> Erin Weir

One significant additional responsibility: reinvigorating his party in time for the next election.

Part of the process will involve assessing the strengths of the current NDP caucus and, perhaps more painfully, looking back to learn from the lessons of what went wrong during the campaign.

"The Liberals were able to outmanoeuvre us to some extent as the agents of change," said Weir.

"But now that they're in power, we'll have to see whether they follow through on those promises, and we'll be there to hold them accountable."

IN BRIEF

Thousands vote to rename Stephen Harper

An online petition hopes to give wings to the idea of changing Stephen Harper's name to "Calgary International Airport."

While other online petitions debate whether the airport should be renamed after the outgoing prime minister, the latest entry proposes the opposite.

The Harper petition had about 2,300 supporters by Sunday evening.

This job could get personal

Prime minister-designate Justin Trudeau faces a delicate task in stocking his cabinet, balancing MPs' skills and experience with potentially wounded pride and resentment.

Michael Woods
Metro | Ottawa

Justin Trudeau's first real test as prime minister comes on Wednesday with the swearing-in of his first cabinet. The choices he makes will set the tone for the next four years of Liberal rule.

Cabinet-making is a difficult task at the best of times — one that can bruise egos and sow resentment if not handled delicately.

That Trudeau has promised an equal number of men and women, a mix of new blood and old guard, strong aboriginal representation and a range of diverse backgrounds makes his job that much more difficult. Will he get it right?

With that in mind, here are Metro's picks for who could make up Trudeau's new cabinet:

Incoming prime minister Justin Trudeau will appoint his cabinet on Wednesday. NICHOLAS KAMM/AFP/GETTY

Scott Brison | Finance
The veteran Nova Scotia MP is a former investment banker who served as Paul Martin's minister of public works and co-chaired Trudeau's council of economic advisers.

Ralph Goodale | Deputy Prime Minister/House Leader
The party's only Saskatchewan MP is a lock for cabinet, having held the finance, public works and natural resources portfolios in the past. The Liberals will need a house leader capable of shepherding their ambitious legislative agenda.

Chrystia Freeland | Foreign Affairs
The former financial journalist and author was a star candidate when first elected in a 2013 Toronto byelection and is highly regarded for her global affairs and economic acumen.

Dominic LeBlanc | Justice
The New Brunswick MP is a Harvard-educated lawyer who was among Trudeau's most prominent backers during his leadership campaign and is also a close friend to the new prime minister.

Stéphane Dion | Environment
Dion, a former party leader, held the environment portfolio in Paul Martin's government and signed Canada on to the Kyoto Accord. He would be immediately tasked with preparing for the United Nations climate-change conference in Paris.

Andrew Leslie | Defence
The retired general and former chief of the land staff was a star candidate in Ottawa and advised Trudeau on defence and foreign-affairs issues before that. Both of his grandfathers were also minister of defence.

Jody Wilson-Raybould | Democratic Reform
Wilson-Raybould is a first-time MP but has a wealth of political experience as a former B.C. regional chief for the Assembly of First Nations and treaty commissioner. She won her Vancouver Granville riding by more than 9,000 votes.

Bill Blair | Public Safety
The new Scarborough MP and former Toronto police chief was another Trudeau star candidate whose expertise lies in the public-safety portfolio, though it's possible he'll get a different cabinet position where he doesn't have as much experience.

Jane Philpott | Health
The first-time MP elected in Markham-Stouffville is a family doctor who has done extensive advocacy work for refugee health care and on HIV/AIDS.

Carolyn Bennett | Aboriginal Affairs
The family doctor and longtime Toronto MP was the party's aboriginal-affairs critic in the last Parliament and has command of the issues at hand. She'll need it; the Liberals have pledged to implement the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's 94 recommendations.

Maryann Mihychuk | Employment and Social Development
Mihychuk, a geoscientist, was a member of Manitoba's NDP government for nine years, holding cabinet roles in industry and intergovernmental affairs. In 2004, she resigned to run for mayor of Winnipeg and finished fourth.

Joyce Murray | Veterans Affairs
The British Columbia MP came second to Trudeau in the 2013 leadership race. She was the party's defence critic in the last Parliament.

Bill Morneau | Treasury Board
Some have tapped the businessman as a possible finance minister but he's a first-time MP and could be given a less-prominent economic portfolio. He was the executive chair of Morneau Shepell, Canada's largest human-resources firm.

5 ministries that will need much more attention

Every minister in the new Liberal government is going to have a lot on their plate, with Justin Trudeau having made sweeping, ambitious campaign promises in nearly every major area of the federal government's jurisdiction. But here are five particular areas that will see big changes under the new government, with Trudeau promising particularly big things in their portfolios.

1. Democratic reform
Trudeau has vowed that Canada won't see another federal election under the first-past-the-post voting system. With Trudeau promising democratic-reform legislation within 18 months and planning to study every option before then, whoever's in charge of the effort is going to have a busy year and a half.

2. Aboriginal affairs
The new aboriginal affairs minister will have a full plate; Trudeau has called for "full implementation of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's 94 recommendations," which are wide-ranging. (One of them is getting the Pope to apologize for residential schools.) The Liberals have also committed to a national inquiry into missing and murdered indigenous women.

3. Citizenship and Immigration
Many experts have said Trudeau's pledge to resettle 25,000 Syrian refugees by the end of the year has a laudable number but a challenging timeline. The new minister will have to lead an enormous co-ordinated effort as quickly as possible.

4. Environment
The new environment minister will have a hectic first few months, with the Paris climate conference starting Nov. 30 and Trudeau promising to convene the premiers within 90 days to come up with a national plan to fight climate change, including emission reduction targets.

5. Defence
With Trudeau's campaign promise to scrap the F-35 fighter purchase and his vow to pull Canada's CF-18s out of the war against the so-called Islamic State, the new defence minister will soon be faced with decisions that will shape Canada's military for years to come.

Marc Garneau | Industry
Garneau, a former astronaut who was the first Canadian in space, was president of the Canadian Space Agency before starting his political career. He was a leadership candidate in 2013 and essentially sealed Trudeau's victory by dropping out of the race.

Emmanuel Dubourg | National Revenue
Dubourg, a chartered accountant and teacher, was the party's national revenue critic in the last Parliament. A former Quebec provincial politician who also spent two decades in the federal public service, he founded a non-profit organization that offers professional accounting services internationally.

Pamela Goldsmith-Jones | Transport
The new Vancouver MP was a two-term mayor of West Vancouver, retired in 2011 to complete an executive MBA and ran a public-affairs consulting firm. Her riding, West Vancouver-Sunshine Coast-Sea to Sky Country, had been held by the Conservatives since 2008.

Maryam Monsef | Labour
Canada's first Afghan-born MP, Monsef came to Canada as a refugee in 1996 with her family. She won the Peterborough riding formerly held by Dean Del Mastro, Stephen Harper's one-time parliamentary secretary.

Kirsty Duncan | Status of Women
First elected in 2008, the medical geographer and Etobicoke MP was the party's status-of-women critic in the last Parliament.

Judy Foote | Chief Government Whip
The Newfoundland and Labrador MP held several cabinet portfolios as a provincial politician. She has been the party whip since 2011 and was the party's deputy house leader before that.

Hunter Tootoo | Natural Resources
Tootoo ran for the federal NDP in 1997 before serving in a number of key roles in Nunavut's territorial government, including Assembly speaker. He is also a successful businessman.

Navdeep Bains | Citizenship and Immigration
Bains was an MP from 2004 until 2011, serving as Paul Martin's parliamentary secretary briefly in 2005. The prominent member of Mississauga's Sikh community more recently co-chaired the Liberals' Ontario campaign and was a key Trudeau organizer.

Yvonne Jones | Fisheries and Oceans, ACOA
Jones was first elected in a 2013 byelection in Labrador, which had been held by the Conservatives. She won re-election on Oct. 19 with 70 per cent of the vote.

Robert Morrissey | Agriculture
Morrissey spent nearly two decades in Prince Edward Island's legislative assembly, starting in 1982, holding a number of prominent roles, including Opposition house leader.

5 ministries that don't exist but should

Justin Trudeau's cabinet is expected to be smaller than his predecessor Stephen Harper's — about 28 members compared to Harper's 39. So there isn't much room for Trudeau to create new roles at the cabinet table. But here are five suggested portfolios that didn't exist under the last government.

1. Housing
Funding for affordable housing is a major part of the Liberals' proposed $20-billion "social infrastructure" plan. The Pierre Trudeau government of the 1970s had a minister of state for urban affairs, who was responsible for housing, but the position didn't exist in the last government.

2. Youth
When it comes to policy-making, Canada's youth population is sometimes left out. According to the group Generation Squeeze, governments in Canada spend a third as much on younger Canadians as those over 65. A minister at the table advocating for Canada's young people could help change that.

3. Municipal affairs
While the intergovernmental affairs minister job already exists, having a minister dedicated to cities' needs could go a long way to achieving the necessary co-ordination between the federal government and municipalities on large infrastructure projects, such as transit.

4. Digital innovation
Governments can be slow to keep up with the rapidly changing digital world. Having a voice at the cabinet table focused on digital innovation could help with that.

5. Sharing economy
The sharing economy is becoming more prevalent, with services such as Uber and Airbnb expanding in Canadian cities and their business model expanding to other realms. With many jurisdictions grappling with how to adapt to regulating these new services, dedicated federal leadership could be useful.

Harjit Sajjan | Heritage
The first Sikh to command a Canadian army regiment, the new Vancouver South MP and lieutenant-colonel did three tours of Afghanistan. He was also a Vancouver police officer for 11 years, specializing in organized crime.

Marie-Claude Bibeau | International Development
Bibeau began her career at the Canadian International Development Agency, with postings in Morocco and Benin. The southeast Quebec MP has owned a successful campground for 15 years and founded a museums association in the Eastern Townships.

Mélanie Joly | Intergovernmental Affairs
Joly, an Oxford-educated lawyer and public-relations expert, came second to Denis Coderre, a former Liberal minister, in the 2013 Montreal mayoral race.

Kent Hehr | Public Works
With the Liberals winning seats in Calgary for the first time since 1968, one new MP is bound to get a seat at the cabinet table. Hehr, a lawyer, was an Alberta provincial politician for seven years.

Catherine McKenna | International Trade
McKenna is an international trade lawyer and former UN adviser in East Timor who defeated NDP stalwart Paul Dewar in Ottawa Centre.

Jet broke up at high altitude after takeoff

EGYPT

Search teams seek bodies of 224 passengers

The Russian jetliner that crashed shortly after takeoff from an Egyptian resort city broke up at high altitude, scattering fragments of wreckage over a wide area in the Sinai Peninsula, Russia's top aviation official said Sunday as search teams raced to recover the bodies of the 224 people who died.

Aviation experts joined the searchers in a remote part of the Sinai, seeking any clues to what caused the Metrojet Airbus A321-200 to plummet abruptly from 31,000 feet just 23 minutes after it departed from the Red Sea resort of Sharm el-Sheikh bound for St. Petersburg.

By midday, 163 bodies had been recovered, according to the Egyptian government. Some of the dead were expected to be flown to Russia later Sunday.

The large area over which fragments were found indicates the jet disintegrated while flying high, said Alexander Neradko, head of Russia's federal aviation agency. He would not comment on any possible reason for the crash, citing the ongoing investigation.

Neradko was in Egypt to inspect the crash site along with Russia's emergency and transport ministers.

A Russian TV channel late Saturday quoted the wife of the co-pilot as saying her husband had complained about the plane's condition. Natalya Trukhacheva, identified as the wife of Sergei Trukhachev, said a daughter "called him up before he flew out. He complained before the flight that the technical condition of the aircraft left much to be desired."

Egyptian President Abdel-Fattah el-Sissi cautioned that the cause of the crash may not be known for months.

"It's very important that this issue is left alone and its causes are not speculated on," he told a gathering of top government officials, members of the military and security forces. The investigation "will take a long time" and "needs very advanced technologies."

The adult whale, estimated to be 35 to 50 feet (10.5 to 15 metres) long, was entangled from its mouth to its tail and what appeared to be nylon rope streamed behind it. Rescuers with the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration and Sea World in San Diego were able to cut away most of the line.

REFUGEE CRISIS

Death toll, tension rising in Greece

Protesters clashed with police guarding a border fence in northern Greece near Turkey Saturday, following a series of sea accidents that killed dozens and a warning that the toll is likely to rise in coming weeks.

About 500 anti-government protesters were involved.

The demonstrators want Greece to tear down the fence and allow refugees to cross by land instead of risking their lives on the sea crossing to Europe.

The government says it cannot remove the fence for "practical reasons" and has called on other European Union countries to speed up support promised for search and rescue operations in the east Aegean Sea.

Greece is struggling to cope with a surge in arrivals, many fleeing the civil war in Syria and other conflicts. More than 60 people, half of them children, have died in the past four days while trying to reach Lesbos and other Greek islands from the Turkish coast. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

$1B not enough for Bombardier

MANUFACTURING

Company still looking at options after Quebec bailout

The $1-billion lifeline Bombardier is getting from the Quebec government will go a long way toward helping the troubled plane and train maker, but it's just one of several initiatives aimed at shoring up the company's financial position, says chief executive Alain Bellemare.

In addition to working on the sale of a minority stake in its railway division, the company is considering other strategic options, including the sale of non-core assets and exploring ways to trim costs from programs like the Q400 turboprop.

Reports suggest the company approached the federal government for at least $350 million in assistance.

Bombardier says it will focus on making its programs more competitive by cutting costs. He pointed to efforts that were rejected by its Toronto unionized employees that would see the manufacture of some parts for the Q400 moved to low-cost countries like Mexico or China.

Although the Q400 does well in North America, it is too pricey for markets like Asia. Rival ATR dominates while Bombardier's market share is just 25 per cent.

And he wouldn't rule out job cuts as the company turns the focus to improving efficiency and operational performance.

RESTAURANTS

Chipotle outlets in U.S. linked to E. coli

Health officials expect the number of people sickened by an E. coli outbreak linked to Chipotle restaurants in Washington state and Oregon to grow while they investigate the cause of the infection.

As of Friday, three people in the Portland area and 19 people in western Washington had become sick from E. coli. Seventeen of them had eaten at a Chipotle restaurant during the past few weeks.

Eight people have been hospitalized but no deaths have been reported.

After people started hearing about the outbreak, more people will probably go to the doctor and join the list of potential cases, said Marisa D'Angeli, medical epidemiologist with the Washington State Department of Health.

"We actually would expect there might be a jump in cases on Monday," she said.

"We're very early in the investigation," D'Angeli said.

The source of the E. coli was most likely a fresh food product, D'Angeli said, because it probably could not be traced to one sick individual or one instance of cross-contamination of food since the cases are connected with so many restaurants.

D'Angeli noted that Chipotle has been co-operative and voluntarily shut down all its restaurants in the two states.

Metro MONDAY POLL

Holding onto home delivery

Visit metronews.ca every Friday to have your say.

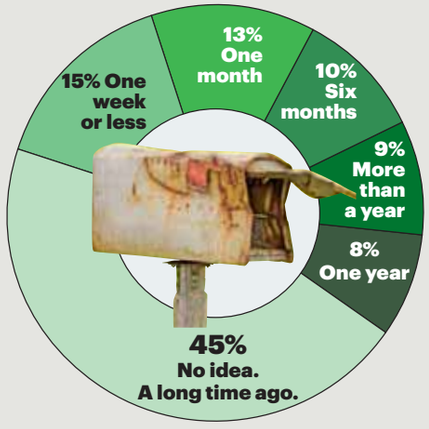
Maybe we won't be saying "So long" to snail mail after all. With a new Liberal majority government soon to take power, the Harper Conservatives' plan to phase out Canada Post's home-delivery service in favour of community mailboxes is set to be halted. But with electronic communication ubiquitous, should we be helping old-fashioned paper postal service to hang on? We asked our readers, and their feelings about mail are a very mixed bag.

1 How long has it been since you sent a letter (not a bill, not a form, not a package — a personal letter)?



2 What do you think Canada Post should do about home delivery?

37% Keep it for as many people as possible
27% Phase it out with a few exceptions (i.e. the elderly)
23% Get rid of it now! It's 2015!
8% Replace it with community mailboxes
5% I have mixed feelings

Maybe cut it to two days a week. I think most people would be okay with that.

3 What do you still use (outgoing) mail for?

15% Holiday greetings
15% Presents and care packages
14% Government forms
12% Personal letters and cards
7% Thank-you notes
6% Paying bills
6% It's part of my job
5% Keeping in touch with family/friends abroad
5% Sending donations
4% Ordering by catalogue
9% I don't use the mail
2% Other

I don't mail cards. No one does that anymore!

A much faster commute might be just a toll away

CITY HOLLER
Trish Kelly

It was back in September when the Ecofiscal Commission invited Metro reporters across the country to learn about congestion pricing by getting stuck in their city's worst traffic with an economist.

I don't often get to write about transportation issues. That's Karen Quinn Fung's beat, and I've usually got enough going on at city hall to keep me busy. But I'll admit, it hurt me not to opine during this spring's transit referendum. So when Chris Ragan, the chair of Ecofiscal, a national non-partisan organization that wants to help big cities find solutions to congestion, invited me to drive with him from English Bay to Surrey during rush hour, I was pretty pumped.

Being a transit rider who's never had more than my learner's licence, I did not really understand how bad those two hours would be. The traffic was terrible. Drivers made hasty moves. I got cranky and I wasn't even driving. My blood sugar crashed and we had to stop for candy.

As we sat gridlocked on the approach to the Pattullo Bridge, Ragan explained the concept of congestion pricing. Essentially, congestion pricing creates a surcharge for road users who get access to faster lanes or routes. The tolled Port Mann Bridge is a kind of congestion pricing: Drivers who decide the time saved is worth the toll, pay the toll.

Like tolled bridges, Ragan noted that in some places, like Minnesota, High-Occupancy Vehicle lanes like the ones we have for vehicles with two or more occupants, have been tolled. These HOT (High-Occupancy Toll) lanes offer a faster lane for those willing to pay. Commercial vehicles, people running late (or who are just impatient) take the tolled lane. Getting those willing to pay into the HOT lane also gets them out of the other lanes, and everyone gets home faster.

Jacked up on a five cent candy high, it all made perfect sense to me. For those who want to dig into case studies and stats, Ecofiscal releases a 50-page report today. If you want the quick and dirty explanation, there's also a video launching too. I'm in it, probably mispronouncing Pattullo and other driving landmarks, looking sweaty as the sugar buzz fizzled.

I miss the wisdom, context and joy that elderly friends bring

An elderly lady and a younger lady walked down my street the other day.

They weren't moving at any clip and they chattered and laughed leisurely.

The elderly lady wore an oversized coat over her small frame and a bright blue tuque, far too large, that stood up like a Smurf hat. She was grinning.

I had the urge to stop my bike and ask them if they walked this neighbourhood often. Were they old friends? Were they family? Maybe I could walk with the old lady sometime (she clearly needed a spotter), since I live around here, too? They looked happy and close.

I didn't stop. But I know why I wanted to.

I miss elders. In my daily 30-something life, they're as absent as children. In my family, only my grandmother-in-law, who I should see far more of, is still around. And the elderly friends I know from my hometown don't live in Toronto, my adopted city.

I'm envious of the friendships some have with their grandparents: the quirky Instagram video of one friend pushing her grandmother's wheelchair down a gentle hill; the Facebook photo of another friend getting pedicures with her grandpa; yet another whose live-in grandmother cooks him hot breakfasts every day.

But we don't have to be related. Old Father Joe, a priest who used to come to dinner when I was a kid and died years ago, was my friend. I once interviewed a woman about her service in the Second World War (when she wore snakeskin pumps and drank mint juleps while working for American intelligence in Washington), and just sitting with her, I felt like I could absorb life advice by osmosis.

Plenty of other people have less-romanticized relationships with older generations. Perhaps they don't care if they don't. But I feel the lack.

Here I am, navigating the day, operating in a vacuum without context for what other's lives were like when they were 30, decades ago, or what they're like now, in their 80s.

And I realize it's reductive, even disrespectful to equate age with wisdom.

But people with different experiences are inherently interesting. And the chance of learning something (and teaching something) seems greater as the difference grows.

Some cultures do better than we (or maybe just I) do at keeping the generations close.

And that little old lady in the blue tuque already has someone to walk with. She doesn't need me. It's me who needs her.

When Everybody steals your idea

ANALYSIS

Detroit designer gets litigious with Toronto line

Melissa Dunne
For Metro Canada

When it comes to trademark, it doesn't matter who had the idea first, it's about who was first to file. PHOTOS COURTESY: PEACE COLLECTIVE AND DETROIT VS. EVERYBODY

"If you want to be original, be ready to be copied."

The quote is often attributed to Coco Chanel, but, perhaps fittingly, now that it's so widely shared online, its origins are murky.

For today's designers who have a less blasé approach to originality, there's trademark law.

It really is Detroit vs. Everybody

The cross-border trademark war between the creator of the Detroit vs. Everybody comfort wear clothing line and the makers of Toronto vs. Everybody maker of sweaters and T-Shirts reached a boiling point last week. Legal representatives for both sides did not return requests for comment, but it's been reported they are trying to come to a truce soon.

In response to the negative image of his gritty city, Tommey Walker Jr. started Detroit vs. Everybody in 2012, while Peace Collective started Toronto vs. Everybody in 2014. Alas, from a legal perspective it doesn't seem to matter who came up with the idea first.

"With trademark, it's the first to file," explained Scott MacKendrick, a partner at Bereskin & Parr LLP, in a phone interview, from his Toronto office.

The founder and chief of peace for Peace Collective does indeed hold the registered trademark to "Toronto vs. Everybody" here in Canada. Walker Jr. reportedly only filed for trademarks in the U.S., so there is likely nothing stopping the many competitors that have popped up around the globe from selling clothing emblazoned with "Vs. Everybody" outside of America, said MacKendrick.

Fail to plan, plan to fail

Ashlee Froese, a fashion lawyer at Toronto's Fogler, Rubinoff LLP, advises anyone starting a small clothing company to hire a lawyer who specializes in fashion law early on to prevent and deal with any legal issues. To start, a basic search should be done to determine that someone else doesn't already hold the trademark you want to register, explains the lawyer who frequently works with young Canadian designers.

Spend money to make money

While the complexity and costs will vary depending on the specifics of each case, having a lawyer get a trademark for your company — from search to application to approval — usually costs about $1,000 to $2,000, said Alison Hayman, an associate in the intellectual property group at Cassels Brock & Blackwell LLP in Toronto. Spending a relatively small amount of money on legal fees when your company is in its infancy can possibly save you a lot of grief, and money, down the road, she added.

Be ready for a battle fought via paperwork

Once you have a trademark it is usually fairly simple to enforce, said MacKendrick. Most cases never make it to trial, usually a letter or two will be exchanged between lawyers and some sort of agreement will be reached. Since trademarks are generally enforced country by country, Froese advises clients at the outset to file trademark applications for all the countries where they might be doing business, which for Canadians usually means filing in both Canada and the U.S.

As the Detroit vs. Everybody website says: "There's leaders, and there's followers…" And if you're a designer who created something original and you'd rather not be copied then you're going to need to file those trademark applications before any of your followers do.

Tips on dealing with a bad manager

COPING

If you have an ineffective boss, step up your strategy

Raquel Laneri
Metro | New York

A recent Gallup study found that half of workers leave their job because of their bosses. But, often it's not because these bosses are overly demanding, or belittling, or like Meryl Streep in The Devil Wears Prada.

"I think many of these people are disappointed in their manager — feeling like their manager does not have their best interest in mind, is not paying attention to them, has their own agenda, or doesn't have good management skills," says Mary Schaefer, an empowerment expert, coach, trainer, speaker and consultant. That can be really frustrating.

A good boss can make you better at your job, can inspire you to strive for more, can be your champion when it's time for a promotion or for a reference.

So, getting along with them not only makes your day-to-day more bearable, it's also essential for career advancement.

But, even if your supervisor is remote or hard to read or just unhelpful, that doesn't mean you should throw in the towel. Schaefer gives us some tips on how to make your relationship with your boss work for you.

High-performing, low-maintenance

The best way to get into your boss's good graces: Do your work while creating as little trouble as possible.

"Here's my catchphrase: Be high-performing and low-maintenance," says Schaefer. "High-performing means you deliver on the objectives given to you.

"As for the low-maintenance part — this may sound silly, but just don't do things that cause friction points. If you have to do online training for ethics by a certain date, do it — don't put yourself in a position that whoever is responsible for that is calling you, or worse calling your boss."

Ask what they expect of you

Of course, being high-performing isn't so easy if you have a hands-off administrator who doesn't give you deadlines or set goals for you. "You need to be clear on what your objectives are and how they're measured," says Schaefer. "I'll get employees say to me, 'My boss tells me I need to do teamwork better; does that mean I need to go out and have beers with the team after work?'"

> You need to be clear on what your objectives are and how they're measured.
> Mary Schaefer

In those circumstances, just ask. "If your boss gives you vague feedback, you can ask questions like, 'What would that look like? What kind of communications would you hear from me? Who would you see me interacting with?'" says Schaefer.

Communicate effectively

Another thing you should clarify with your boss early on: the best way to reach him or her, what kind of situation warrants a call at home and what terms like "ASAP" or "urgent" mean.

"That's one thing that can cause frustration: when the boss is not responsive to something that an employee sees as a priority," says Schaefer. In those cases, you need to speak up: "If they seem annoyed or defensive, say, 'I'm asking these questions because I want to do a good job.' Your boss may not like it, but they can't argue with you wanting to do a good job."

Sell your ideas

A lot of young people tell Schaefer that they feel like their ideas aren't being taken seriously by their bosses.

"It's important to learn how to manage their objections," she says.

"So, maybe come at your suggestions sideways: Instead of saying, 'Hey, I have an idea,' ask, 'What do you think about this? Have you noticed this problem? What have we tried so far?'"

Have a Plan B

At the end of the day, it's your career, and you need to do what's best for you.

"I don't think this can be repeated too much," says Schaefer. "But you need to own your career. Think not what can my boss do about this, and instead what can I do. And have a Plan B: Your employer really does owe you nothing."

Bad bosses are tough, but looking for solutions is better than cursing them. ISTOCK

RESEARCH

Getting bigger? Your work may be to blame, study says

New research has found a link between our jobs and our waistline.

According to researchers in Australia, people whose work days require constant decision-making are at greater risk of expanded waistlines compared to their counterparts.

Conversely, workers who exercised control by regularly applying their skills to their jobs — known as skill discretion — were found to have lower BMI and a smaller waist size.

> Many people point to 'eating too much and not moving enough' as the cause of obesity.
> Researcher Christopher Bean, who says that environmental factors can help explain why people engage in the behaviors that cause obesity

Skill discretion is measured by factors such as the development of new skills, task variety, creativity and learning new things.

The overarching conclusion from the study, published in the journal Social Science and Medicine, suggests that the two aspects of job control — decision-making and the application of skills — should be treated separately when evaluating levels of job stress and health.

"Many people point to 'eating too much and not moving enough' as the cause of obesity," said lead author Christopher Bean.

"While this might explain how weight gain often happens, it does not acknowledge things such as environmental, psychological, social or cultural factors — these are some of the important why reasons that obesity happens."

For the study, researchers from University of Adelaide, Central Queensland University and the University of South Australia analyzed data from 450 middle-aged participants who worked in both blue- and white-collar positions.

Along with health data (height, weight, waist circumference), participants provided information on the psychosocial qualities of their work.

The results show the nature of people's jobs and authority had different effects on their weight. AFP

Don't fall into a debt depression

MOVING FORWARD

Focus on the sunny side of a financially healthy future

Gail Vaz-Oxlade
For Metro Canada

Being in debt for a long time can sap your desire, motivation, and belief that you can ever be out of debt. It's what I call "debt fatigue," and it's insidious.

You don't think things can ever change. You don't believe there's any point to even trying. You'll never be happy. What do you do if you're already there?

Well, you can wallow, or you can accept that you're in an emotional cycle and kick your own butt to a new place.

Experiencing debt fatigue doesn't mean you'll never feel good again, it just means that the things you do to feel good about don't last very long and are often detrimental to your long-term financial health.

Any of this sound familiar?

Having debt is normal. Everyone has debt.

I'm so far in debt now, I might as well . . . go on holiday, buy this dress, fill-in-the-blank.

If I have to wait to get out of debt to buy (whatever), I'll be old and grey.

The next time you're feeling defeated by your debt, put your logic into drive and your emotions into neutral. The feelings will pass if you stay on the path toward your goal. That assumes, of course, that you have a goal.

If you haven't started down the track to living debt-free forever by taking even the smallest step, what are you waiting for?

Nothing will change until you take a step forward. It's time to make a plan and get with some people who have been where you are now. A friend, a family member, a co-worker or two who have taken this journey can help you.

Talk about your debt. How it makes you feel? And what you want to do about it?

Get it out in the open. Commit to doing something differently.

Having a few positive people on your side is a great way to defeat debt fatigue. Since we know that thoughts — both positive and negative — are contagious, surrounding yourself with people who are on track to achieve their goal of being debt-free forever will help clear your path.

While you're on your journey, if you focus in only on what you don't have — what you've given up to find money to pay off your debt, or what you can't have because you're broke — you'll deepen your debt depression.

> Having a few positive people on your side is a great way to defeat debt fatigue.

Consider everything that is good in your life.

Count yourself fortunate. Be grateful. Change from focusing on what's missing to seeing what you do have.

Remember to count your successes along the way.

This is an important part in not getting weighed down by how far you have to go. Use charts to plot your progress. Have small celebrations each time you hit a milestone. Give yourself a hug for what you've achieved, instead of a kick for how far you still have to go.

If you're serious about moving forward, if you're tired of feeling tired with your debt and want to get to a better place, action is required.

Once you get some results, you'll build momentum and positive thinking will come easier.

But you have to take that first step.

Lucrative biz of Christmas music

RADIO

Stations see 81 per cent jump in ratings with holiday tunes

Alan Cross
For Metro Canada

Even though the Halloween decorations still haven't been taken down, Christmas creep has begun.

It won't be long before we're smothered by Mariah Carey's All I Want for Christmas is You and The Christmas Shoes, the death-by-treacle classic. Past data suggests that both songs will be streamed on YouTube more than 1.75 million times between Nov. 1 and Dec. 31.

And then there are all the times the songs will be played on the radio, a situation exacerbated by the dozens of radio stations that change to an all-Christmas format leading up to the end of the year.

On-air staff hate this time of year. Salespeople love it.

All-Christmas playlists bring in huge, huge ratings, especially for outlets that already have a reputation as being the "music at work" station in a given market.

The annual flip to Christmas almost always sees those stations rocket far, far past the competition. According to 2014 data from Nielsen, the average — average! — 24/7 Christmas music-playin' adult contemporary station saw a ratings jump by 81 per cent.

That massive (albeit temporary) ratings number is more than enough to help the station sustain revenues over the always challenging winter months. From a financial point of view, moving to an all-Christmas format is a no-brainer.

But timing is key. When should a station abandon its regular format for Christmas music 2/47? Mid-November? The day after Halloween? Earlier?

At least two stations have already made the flip. WEBC-AM 560, a Duluth sports station, and its FM companion, FM 106.5 (now branded Ho Ho Ho 106.5), went all-Christmas Oct. 7. Extreme, yes, but as of Sept. 25 — three full months before Christmas and before any of the trees started to turn — sister stations WENN 1320 and 100.1 FM in Birmingham, Ala., dropped their regular programming and went all-Christmas. Management promises to run this music commercial-free until Dec. 25.

Obviously if these stations can run without commercials for that long during one of the busiest times of the year, they're already in the ratings dumpster, so what does management have to lose? Come the end of the year, they might be running 1 and 2 in the market.

Two stations playing The Christmas Shoes in high rotation for nearly a 100 days? Be thankful you don't work there. After all, Alabama is an open-carry state.

What a difference a day makes for what's in heavy rotation on the radio. HANDOUT/GETTY IMAGES

Ousted's solid play keeps Vancouver in frantic 2nd half

Cam Tucker
Metro | Vancouver

One side will lament missed chances, as will the other. In the end, the Vancouver Whitecaps and Portland Timbers played to a scoreless draw Sunday, in the first leg of their MLS Western Conference semifinal.

Both teams, expansion cousins and Cascadia rivals, will now travel back to Vancouver for the second leg, on Nov. 8 at BC Place Stadium.

For the Whitecaps, their line of thinking is simple: win and they're through to the conference final.

But with a Portland goal or two at BC Place, the Timbers would make things achingly more difficult for the Vancouver club, given the aggregate score and away goal rules.

"The mindset now changes to next week's game at BC Place," said head coach Carl Robinson.

"We had two great chances in that first half and we didn't take them, so nothing we can do. You've got to get back to work."

In the opening half, it was an inability to finish chances that cost Vancouver that important goal. In the second half, well, the Whitecaps were barely able to hang on for the draw in front of a lively crowd at Providence Park.

STEVE DYKES/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Playing less than 72 hours after advancing to the semifinal round following a gruelling, emotional victory over Sporting Kansas City, it was thought perhaps the Timbers could, as this game versus Vancouver progressed, succumb to fatigue.

Instead, the Timbers were on the attack for most of the second half. They built momentum and the Whitecaps couldn't grab it back.

Had it not been for a Maxi Urruti post and the marvelous play of goalkeeper David Ousted, the Whitecaps would surely be headed north left to ponder long and hard about a result that got away.

Ousted was brilliant. He was at his best when the Whitecaps needed it. His best save of the afternoon came on a dangerous Diego Valeri free kick.

Vancouver's Danish goalie jumped to his left and, with his stands outstretched, knocked the ball just barely out of line with the net. It was a terrific shot, headed right for the top corner. But Ousted made an even better save.

"I think he's the best goalkeeper in the MLS," said defender Kendall Waston.

Habs' second-string goalie keeps Jets grounded

It doesn't matter who is stopping pucks for the Montreal Canadiens. The offence is doing more than enough to fill the opposing net.

Tomas Fleischmann scored twice and added an assist and David Desharnais contributed a goal and two assists to lift the Canadiens to a 5-1 win over the Winnipeg Jets on Sunday night at the Bell Centre.

It marked the 12th time in 13 games this season that Montreal (11-2-0) has scored at least three goals in a game and the sixth time it has scored at least four goals.

"Any goalie isn't going to complain about the team scoring goals," said rookie goaltender Mike Condon, who made 18 saves for his fourth win in as many starts. "We play good defensively and that translates into offence. I'm very fortunate for that and it's very fun to watch."

Condon was the unexpected starter after it was announced Sunday morning that Carey Price would miss the next week with a lower-body injury.

"I'm not going to try and be Carey. I don't think anyone can," said the 25-year-old Condon. "I'm just going to try and keep the spot warm for him."

The Jets (7-4-1) couldn't generate much against the Canadiens and saw their two-game winning streak snapped.

Lions secure playoff berth

After taking care of business Friday, then getting a favourable result on the out-of-town scoreboard Sunday, the B.C. Lions are off to the playoffs.

The Leos entered Week 19 of the Canadian Football League schedule in control of their own destiny in the turtle derby race for the final playoff spot in the West Division, but virtually guaranteed themselves a ticket to the big dance with a win over the Toronto Argonauts on Friday, and rookie quarterback Jonathon Jennings once again at the helm.

That Lions' 27-25 win over the Argos eliminated the Winnipeg Blue Bombers from playoff contention.

Two days later, the Montreal Alouettes saw their chances of being a crossover team into the West officially dashed in a loss to the Edmonton Eskimos.

The Lions, now with a record of 7-10, are into the playoffs for a 19th consecutive season, despite plenty of growing pains along the way in this first year under head coach Jeff Tedford.

They'll finish the season out Saturday against the defending Grey Cup champions, the Calgary Stampeders, at BC Place Stadium. CAM TUCKER/METRO

ROYALS	METS

Christian Colon singled home the tiebreaking run in the 12th inning, and those bound-and-determined Royals rallied one more time to beat the New York Mets 7-2 in 12 innings early Monday for their first World Series championship since 1985 and second overall.

Down two runs in the ninth, Kansas City fought back in Game 5 against two of the top arms on the pitching-rich Mets: Matt Harvey and Jeurys Familia. And the Royals did it not with home-run power but instead a daring dash from Eric Hosmer, a three-run double by Lorenzo Cain and a couple of crucial stolen bases. Consistent contact, keep the line moving.

And that's how the Royals became the first team since the 2002 Angels to come from behind in all four World Series wins, according to STATS. That's how they washed away the bitter taste of last year's Game 7 loss at home to San Francisco, an October heartbreak that drove them to their singular focus all season. Never waver. Win it all this time.

Now, this group of homegrown favourites that turned around a floundering franchise, Mike Moustakas and Alex Gordon and Hosmer, can take their place in Royals history alongside George Brett, Willie Wilson, Bret Saberhagen and those champs from 30 years ago.

Manning ties Favre's mark

Peyton Manning tied Brett Favre's NFL record with his 186th regular-season win, and Denver's defence rattled Aaron Rodgers into one of the worst games of his career in the Broncos' 29-10 victory over the Green Bay Packers on Sunday night.

Rodgers went 14 of 22 for just 77 yards for the Packers (6-1) — the lowest of his career in a game where he wasn't knocked out by injury.

Drew Brees passed for career highs of 511 yards and seven touchdowns, and recently signed Kai Forbath kicked a 50-yard field goal as time ran out Sunday, giving the New Orleans Saints a 52-49 victory in a game with a record 13 scoring passes.

Eli Manning connected on a career-high six touchdown passes as New York (4-4) fell to New Orleans (also 4-4).

RECIPE Coconut Lentil Soup

Ceri Marsh & Laura Keogh
For Metro Canada

This seductively aromatic recipe makes a big pot of soup. Bust out your Thermos and take it to work tomorrow!

Ready in
Prep time: 30 minutes
Serves 6

Ingredients
- 1 Tbsp olive oil
- 1 onion, diced
- 2 large carrots, peeled and diced
- 2 cloves of garlic, minced
- 1 Tbsp fresh ginger, minced
- 1 Tbsp curry powder
- 1/2 tsp each cinnamon and cumin
- 1/3 cup tomato paste
- 4 cups vegetable stock
- 3 cups water
- 1 can coconut milk
- 2 cups dried red lentils
- 1 big handful of fresh spinach, sliced into ribbons
- Juice 1/2 lemon
- Salt and pepper to taste

Directions
1. Heat oil in a big pot over medium heat. Add onions and carrots and cook until they begin to soften, about 3 minutes. Toss in garlic, ginger and spices. Stir and cook for another 3 minutes. Then add the tomato paste and stir again.
2. Pour in the stock, water, coconut milk and lentils. Give everything a good stir and let it simmer — not boil — for about 25 minutes. Taste to check that lentils are tender.
3. Throw in the spinach and stir it around until it just wilts. Add the lemon juice and taste before adjusting for salt and pepper.

IT'S ALL IN THE STARS by Sally Brompton

Aries March 21 - April 20
You must be scrupulously honest. You stand to lose a lot if partners and business associates get the impression that you cannot be trusted.

Taurus April 21 - May 21
You may get upset and emotional about something today but later in the week it will baffle you as to why you lost control. In partnership situations try to give others the benefit of the doubt. They are not deliberately trying to annoy you.

Gemini May 22 - June 21
You may disagree with what certain people say or do but don't get worked up about it. They are hoping you will get angry so they can use it as an excuse to move against you.

Cancer June 22 - July 23
There are things you can do on your own and things that have to be done in partnership with other people. What happens today will draw a clear, thick line between the two and you ignore that line at your peril.

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23
What happens next will impact both your work and your home life. Don't let the pressure get to you. Stay calm and you will be one of life's winners.

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
If you're feeling down the answer is to get busy on something that requires the full use of both your brain and your body. A social invitation may be tempting but it's not right for you, so give it a miss.

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
Keep a tight hold of your cash because the planets warn there will be a lot of temptations. If you go over the top financially now you could regret it, so be careful.

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
It is quite likely that your self-control will crack today and you will say or do something drastic. Don't hate yourself for losing your cool. Scorpios have feelings too.

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
It may seem as if time is running out and that the harder you work the less you seem to complete. But is that such a big deal? It's quality work that counts. Do what you can and do it well.

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
Even friends and family will be touchy as the new week begins, don't overreact. Capricorn is such a self-controlled sign that it's unlikely you will go to extremes.

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
It may seem as if you are losing ground to your rivals but it isn't true, so don't panic. Cosmic activity in one of the more confrontational areas of your chart is making things look worse than they actually are.

Pisces Feb. 20 - March 20
Stick to the facts — if you make things up you will be found out and it will be embarrassing. You may have the gift of the gab at the moment but if you are smart you will not abuse it.
